

BRING HOME BREWING UNDER PROHIBITION BAN

Enforcement Officials Rule Against Sale of Hops and Malt.

DETAILS OF ORDER LACKING

Officials Construe Volstead Act to Mean That Ingredients of Concoction Are Without Pale of Law, Except Bakers and Confectioners.

[By Associated Press.]
WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—Home brewing was brought actively under the prohibition ban today when it was learned that enforcement officials had ruled against the sale of hops and malt to others than bakers and confectioners. Great secrecy surrounded the prohibition bureau's decision, but it was ascertained definitely that such instructions had been issued.

Details of the order were lacking. The only admission made by prohibition officials in the absence of Commissioner Kramer was that the Volstead act had been construed to mean that the sale of hops and malt as component parts of home-made beer were without the pale of the law and their sale must stop. Enforcement officials throughout the country have been notified of the government's determination, but they have not been supplied with the technical language of the decision.

The construction of the law which resulted in the new order was made nearly two months ago, at which time officials having it in charge started a document through the regular procedure from which it emerges as a Treasury decision. But it has not yet been approved by Secretary Houston. Further than to admit existence of the proposed Treasury ruling, officials declined to discuss it.

Enter General Denials.
Umphreys denied was made to report that the bureau had considered or had included in the order other articles used in home brewing. Officials likewise denied that provision was to be made for the licensing of even the bakers and confectioners, apparently the only persons who will be able to purchase hops and malt.

There were persistent rumors at both the prohibition and internal revenue headquarters that scores of complaints had come from the manufacturing of cereal beverages, containing less than one-half percent of alcohol, against the tremendous growth of brewing as a home industry. On this phase of the situation officials also refused to comment. It was understood, however, that the beverage manufacturers had based a complaint on a steady but rapid decrease in their sales, which they charged to the growth of home brewing. They were understood to have protested to the internal revenue bureau that enforcement officers were enforcing the alcoholic restrictions on them while the home brewer, with the aid of hops and malt, has been able to produce a beverage approximating old-fashioned beer.

Expect Wave of Litigation.
Officials anticipated that the ban on malt and hops sales would bring a wave of litigation as to the government's rights. They claimed, however, that their decision had been preceded by a thorough study of the questions involved and said they were prepared to meet the attack.

Sections of the act specifically prohibiting the sale of ingredients of beer as well as the formal advertising of recipes for its manufacture were cited as one of the foundations for the ruling. The point which they expect to be tested in court was whether the food value of the two articles banned would, in the eyes of a court, permit their continued sale as such despite their use as a basis for beverage making. The distinction between the use of the two articles which cannot be sold, and fruits, sugars and syrups, was said to be regarded as rather indefinite, but those having the question in charge believed they were on safe ground.

HARDING OFFERS PEACE TO WORLD, BUT WITH U. S. FREE

Mexican Consul Vasquez, of Brownsville, and American Consul Wilson, of Matamoros, rode together, each waving the flag of his country. Many other Mexican flags were in the procession and the military band of the Matamoros garrison had a place just behind the Fourth Cavalry squadron, which acted as the President-elect's military escort. The Matamoros district was one of those who set on the speakers' stand.

Before Mr. Harding's turn on the program, there were addresses by C. L. Jessup, vice-president of the Brownsville Chamber of Commerce, who spoke for the waterways move-

Text of Senator Harding's Speech.

The text of Senator Harding's speech follows in part:

"November 11 has an abiding significance to America and the world. For America it sealed our capacity to defend our national rights and stamped our effectiveness in aiding to preserve the established order of world civilization; for the world it marked a new order for humanity, and for all time it was an ambition and madness for power that one man's or one people's domination of the world was never designed by God, and will never be tolerated by mankind.

The day is especially interesting to our own country because, without American participation, it might have been a later and different date, if, indeed, there had been an Armistice Day at all. We do not claim to have won the war, but we helped mightily, and recorded undying glory to American arms. We are now in a new understanding of the American spirit and a new measure of American resources.

Selfishness Not American Trait.
"Whatever the world may have thought of us before, however incognito, we have been appraised, the world has come to know that selfishness is not a trait of our national character, that commercialism does not engross us, that neutrality was conceived in fairness—not in fear—and that when our national rights are threatened, America is resolved to defend, and ever will. More, we gave to humanity an example of unselfishness which it only has appraised before misunderstandings led to confusion.

We helped to win the war, unaided and unarmored. We fought with the allied powers, but we were not an associated power, and were never committed, it is fully aware of them, to the compacts of the alliance. History will record it correctly, no matter how much beautiful sentiment has beclouded our progress in the world war. We did not fight to make the world safe for democracy, though we were its best exemplar. Nor did we fight for humanity's sake, no matter how such a motive might be impelled. Democracy was threatened and humanity was dying long before American indignation called for the republic's defense. But we fought for the one supreme cause which inspires men to offer all for country and the flag, and we fought as heroes, a free America and dropped the sword and stilled greed, when the victory for defense was won.

Does not Ask, but Freely Gives.
"We proved anew that here is free and ample America, which does not ask, but freely gives. We were Americans in name before the world war made us American in fact, not a collection of peoples, but one people, with one purpose, one confidence, one pride, one aspiration, and one flag.

"We learned a lesson, too, of transcending importance. Righteousness and unflinching justice are not in themselves a guaranty of national security. We must ever be strong in peace, foremost in industry, eminent in agriculture, ample in transportation, and an adequate merchant marine would have speeded our participation and shortened the conflict. I believe an America eminent on the high seas, respected in every avenue of trade, will be safer at home and greater in influence throughout the world.

"I like to think of an America whose citizens are ever seeking the greater development and enlarged resources and widened influence of the republic and I like to think of a government which protects its citizens wherever they go on a lawful quest.

mission, anywhere under the shining sun.
Cause for Renewed Pride.
"All the things of modern home in Ohio to the furthestmost port on the Gulf, I have seen among the people who came to give us kindly greetings, scores of stalwart, virile, young Americans who served their country so gallantly and effectively at home and overseas. One must have cause for renewed pride in the character of these men, in their readiness and ability to serve, in the calm certitude of their manhood, in the new belief in an America of civility and human and religious liberty, they believe in America first and ideals. They believe in America first and inspirations center."

"We are only in the morn of national life. Who dares to prophesy, the future has in store? One needs only to see this magic valley, where the possibilities are not yet touched, to see how prophesy fails short, when a simple for an empire of 50,000,000. Ships of modern commerce, thought to enliven Laguna Madre lake, where the craft marked activities of many years ago, in these alone is incalculable. Agriculture, transportation, commerce, all are growing in the gleam of the sun, and adding to the strength of our commonwealth. We are only to go on, independent and free, to write the supreme history of the world, and unimpaired."

We choose no aloofness, we shrink not from the future, we forsake no friends, but we built in national pride and we do not mean to surrender it."

WALL STREET BLAST LAID TO LABOR PLOT BY NEW YORK WORLD

has found two business men of high standing to whom Clark told it the afternoon of the explosion, and to whom he mentioned it again when explaining to them three weeks ago. And so certain are these two business men of the justification for Clark's frightened silence that they would not talk to the investigator at all until they had a promise guaranteed by higher authority than that of the reporter that their names would not be published.

Tells of Shooting of Clark.
It told of the circumstances surrounding the shooting of Clark. The report was accompanied on the night of October 17 by a foreman subordinate, James Reilly, coming out of the garage at Reilly's Long Island City home when it was quite dark, the two were confronted without warning by three strangers, one of whom asked: "Which of you is Reilly?"

"I'm Reilly," was the reply of the assistant foreman.

"Then you are Clark," sharply interrogated, "first speak."

"I'm Clark," answered the man who had heard the tale of the cart driver.

Instantly the shots rang out. Clark fell to the ground and before either he or his companion could recover from the shock of the sudden attack, the gunmen had escaped.

A heavy, old-fashioned watch in Clark's breast pocket, saved his life, by deflecting the first bullet. The second grazed his shoulder, while the third went wild.

Federal agents have developed no evidence. Department of Justice officials said tonight, and to the Wall Street bomb explosion tending to substantiate the solution of the mystery published today by the New York Evening World, and linking the explosion with the "building trust graft" under investigation at that city.

Robert T. Scott, assistant to the Attorney-General, said that agents of the department working on the explosion had not found the far any tangible clue having any bearing on the direction suggested by the newspaper. The government still hopes to solve the problem, he added, but its expectation lay in another direction, if the criminals ever are found.
